About

Beginning in 2010, Chab Dai Coalition's Butterfly Longitudinal Re/integration Research Project (BLR) was a 10-year project following the lives of 128 child & adult survivors of human trafficking, exploitation, and/or abuse.

Research Project's Core Objectives

- Explore the perceptions and experiences of a cohort of victim/survivors of sexual exploitation and trafficking about their lives and re/integration experiences.
- Facilitate local annual roundtable discussions, forums, and workshops with anti-trafficking partners and stakeholders on themes and findings.
- Provide specific confidential feedback to partner organizations, as needed and requested.
- Disseminate the findings of publications to broad audiences of practitioners, programmers, policy makers, government bodies and academics

Acknowledgments

This research has been made possible through the support and dedication of many parties—as the saying goes, ‘it takes a village’. First and foremost, we express our deepest thanks to our research participants for sharing their life stories and experiences. Without their own passion, trust, and courage to share with us, this research would have never reached the ears of stakeholders around the globe. We also send our appreciation to each of the Assistance Programs & Butterfly Research Consultants that have partnered with Chab Dai since the beginning of the project. All have given the team and project a wealth of access, insight, and reflection on our findings, recommendations, and programmatic implementation. Finally, we express our thanks to ACCI, Change of Path, Imago Dei Fund, Karakin Foundation, Love 146, Stronger Together, Tenth Church and anonymous donors for their continued financial support. These organizations & people share in our foundational belief that knowledge and survivor-voices are essential for a brighter future free of human trafficking.

Methodology

Longitudinal Research Design

Longitudinal Research is defined as: “(a) collecting data for each item or variable for (at least) two or more distinct time periods; (b) analysing the same or at least comparable subjects or cases from one period to the next; and (c) analysing data which involves some comparison between or among periods” (Menard, 2002, p2).

More specifically, Butterfly is a Prospective Panel Longitudinal Research, designed to interview the same 128 survivors of human trafficking, exploitation, and/or abuse over the course of the 10 year project—a world’s first of its kind. (Babbie, 2007; Bryman, 2008; Menard, 2002)

Mixed Methodology

- Simultaneously Quantitative and Qualitative through cross analysis between In-Depth Interviews and Quantitative Surveying
- While always longitudinal in nature, Butterfly has taken a mixed methodology approach in its data collection and reporting. This has allowed for a diversity of ways a respondent can volunteer their story to the research team. Mixed method and longitudinal surveying has also developed a deep sense of trust between the researcher and participant as subjects are investigated and reflected upon during the interviews.
- This has also allowed Butterfly researchers to let the data speak to the way it should be reported rather than the other way around. This makes Butterfly reports more accessible to Butterfly’s global audience and diversity of learning styles.
- 2011-2013 heavy focus on quantitative data collection and reporting
- 2014 Reflection led to a change in the project’s Methodology: “In the light of the overall purpose of this research, which is to listen to the perspectives and experiences of victim/survivors, the team believes at this point in the study a stronger focus on a qualitative approach is more appropriate for capturing the nuances and complexity of people’s lives.” (Miles, 2014, p5)
- 2014-2019: Mixed Methodology with heavy focus on Qualitative data collection and thematic reporting
